Dear Premier Rae -

I would like to place on record, again, with the Premier's Office, our concern about atrocities being committed in Ministry of Health facilities against persons whose central nervous system dysfunction is caused by environmental sensitivities.

It has been more than two years since we first expressed concern about ongoing abuse to the current Premier's Office. I am unaware of any effort made by anyone in the provincial cabinet or public service to bring an end to the horrific abuse of members of this group.

As indicated in previous correspondence, several authorities, for decades, have recommended screening for sensitivities when symptoms are ambiguous. Screening out patients with sensitivities from the general psychiatric population prevents the worsening of the iatrogenic, traumatic, and disabling symptoms.

The response of the provincial government has been to allow abuse to continue in provincial facilities, by provincial staff and provincially funded and regulated professionals. The matter has been made very much worse by the fact that over the years provincial health officials have fostered intolerant attitudes that have resulted in extreme damages to members of this group, their families, and so on.

It seems the Ministry of Health hopes to avoid the issue of its own abuse of patients, while focussing attention on attitudes in the community. The NDP is good at lecturing, but not very good at meeting its own responsibilities to protect people from arbitrary interference!
